Keskeliä was a type of building located in Länsi-Karjala, which consists of a circular ring of stones.

The structure appears to be a stone circle, possibly a dolmen or a henge. The inscription includes a description of the building's components, such as the stones and the overall layout.

The text is in Finnish, and it seems to provide a historical or archaeological account of the site, including its location and significance.

The diagram illustrates the layout of the building, with labeled parts corresponding to the description in the text.