Here you have the data that I have collected so far on the object in question. The object is a piece of glass with a unique pattern. I believe it may be of historical significance.

From the measurements, it appears that the object is about 2 cm in diameter and 1 cm thick. The glass is transparent and has a slight greenish tint. The pattern is etched into the glass, and it seems to be composed of small, intricate designs.

I have also noted the presence of small bubbles and air pockets within the glass. This could indicate that the object was handmade or that it was created through a吹制 process.

The object was found in a cave, which suggests that it may have been used for some sort of ceremonial purpose. I plan to conduct further research to determine its exact origin and purpose.
